

Midnight Vain

I saw vain clearly
She was scared and troubled
She turned and spied through the window into the lurid, wretched alley
I saw her eyes dilating and hand quivering with distress
And heard her scream like a hawk in the now-silent night
And I felt like a child who had lost everything